1. The difference between the Peace Preservation Office and the Peace Preservation Corps is that the former performs police and administrative functions while the latter is a military organization. Liaison, particularly in the investigation of "reactionaries" and agents, exists between the two, but the Peace Preservation Office is mainly a civilian organization.

2. The Sinuiju (Shingishu) (124-24,40-06) Peace Preservation Office is divided into six sections and is believed to resemble Peace Preservation Offices of other North Korean cities. The six sections are as follows:

A. General Affairs Section

- (1) General Affairs Office
- (2) Finance Office

B. Peace Protection Section

- (1) Auditing Office
- (2) Public Peace Office (Public Safety Office?)

C. Inspection Section

- (1) Patrol Office
- (2) Investigation Office

D. Guard Section

- (1) Guard Office
- (2) Communications Office

E. #1 Inspection Section (handles "thought" criminals) (i.e., "reactionaries", "freethinkers", etc.)

F. #2 Inspection Section (handles ordinary criminals).

3. The Cultural Department of the Province (Iyongan-pukto) (Heian-hokudo) Peace Preservation Office Headquarters maintains a connection with the Sinuiju City Peace Preservation Office. The exact nature of this liaison is unknown but is thought to be concerned with the personal affairs of members of the Sinuiju Office.
note: A Personal Affairs Bureau?
